

Spring accounting grads fare better in hiring than their peers:

Posted by AccountingWEB in Education & Careers on 04/23/2010

For the first time since October 2008, employers plan to increase hiring of new college graduates, showing the job market has turned a corner, a new report states.

More good news for accounting majors: Not only is hiring up, but accounting firms made more offers to new bachelor's degree graduates than any other employer, NACE said in a separate salary survey, which is issued quarterly. Engineering firms were No. 2 on the list with retailers/wholesalers at No. 3.

“Although data are limited at this time of year, the results are consistent with what we have seen in the past,” Mackes said. “Accounting and engineering organizations historically have been among the most active in terms of recruiting and hiring new college graduates.”