Many Faces
ONE MISSION

inside: President’s Report 2006
As we begin a new semester at SBU in the aftermath of what will be known in Southwest Missouri as the Ice Storm of 2007, we are all a bit more reflective than usual. Being without electricity, heat, food refrigeration, and/or water for days and days was a humbling experience for those of us used to these twenty-first century comforts, not to mention the indulgences we missed when we also experienced the loss of cell phones, Internet service, and cable television. As my family and I huddled in front of our fireplace in the candlelight, I couldn’t help but think of all the places around the world where SBU sends missionaries. How many of these places have never had the comforts of electricity, running water, easily accessible heat and refrigerated food or the advantages of telephone service? Worse yet, how many places around the world have never had a Bible in which to find comfort on their dark and cold days? My family and friends were able to seek comfort from Scriptures and prayer as well as literal comfort in the many shelters set up in area churches. How dark our world literally would be without Christ and His people spreading His compassion and the Good News!

For SBU to succeed in continuing to send out missionaries throughout the world and to prepare all students for the Great Commission responsibilities each Christian faces, we need to be mindful of the needs of our global society. Besides the breadth of a liberal arts education and the depth of study in their chosen academic field, what do students need to be prepared for effectively working in a global society? The bottom-line: Students need the ability to feel compassion for people who do not look or talk like them.

How many times do we see someone different from us and make a rapid judgment about what that person must be like? At SBU, we intentionally seek to welcome many faces – students of different races and of different cultures who are encouraged to invest their time here with one mission in mind:

Southwest Baptist University is a Christ-centered, caring academic community preparing students to be servant leaders in a global society.

To truly create a caring, academic community for students of many faces, we must continue our efforts to recruit talented students from all walks of life. Students from the city need to learn how to relate to students from the country and vice versa. Students from different races or international cultures need to learn how to relate to students who are different from themselves. In addition, to support students of different faces, we must renew our commitment to recruit more faculty and staff of many faces. Our students of color will have a more difficult time seeing themselves as a scientist, mathematician, poet or business executive if they only see Caucasian scholars in these fields. If a woman only sees men in leadership roles, she will assume that she cannot be a leader. I pray that we will soon see more women in leadership and as many faces of color on our faculty as we see in our student body.

In this issue we feature many SBU faces: some of our international and minority students, our football coaches with a passion to “face the giants” and give minority young men a hand up, our female leadership and female faculty in non-traditional fields, one of our minority faculty members, and two of our faculty and staff members who have lived a “Life Beautiful.” We also feature an alumni couple with a passion for missions and compassion for people of different faiths. Their commitment to the Great Commission can be an inspiration to us all.

As we begin a new semester recovering from the Ice Storm of 2007, we celebrate the global society that is represented by our students, faculty, and staff. We hope you enjoy reading about the many faces of SBU!

A Dream and a Challenge

As a distinctively Christian university, we must have a genuine Christ-like spirit of warmth, love, openness, and graciousness permeating our campus. We must communicate to people that Jesus Christ is real and at work in this world. We must be intentional in manifesting an atmosphere of warmth and caring, where we treat each individual as a unique child of God. It is my dream that SBU will foster an environment where people can discover their worth and their value as individuals, where minds can grow and personalities emerge, where faith can grow, where hope for mankind is generated and where the name of Jesus Christ is exalted. One of my personal heroes is Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. I grew up in the 1960s, and I was in Memphis the day Dr. King was assassinated. I was impressed by Dr. King’s cause for oppressed people to rise above the discrimination they felt and to answer violence in a non-violent way. I loved Dr. King’s ability to speak and walk in a way that influenced people. No doubt, you are familiar with his now-famous “I Have a Dream” speech:

“I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: ‘We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.’ I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia, the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood. I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character. I have a dream that one day every valley shall be exalted, and every hill and mountain shall be made low, the rough places will be made plain, and the crooked places will be made straight and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall see it together.”

My dream for our minority students is that all of them will find a home here at SBU. There are challenges in a rural, predominantly white community to create a climate where minority students can adapt to their new surroundings. Sometimes I think we forget that many of our students are coming to a new culture when they begin their college careers. Campus life is very different from home life and high school. Students from Bolivar may be living with students from New York or South America. Students from California may be living with students from Africa or Asia. Wealthy students might be living with students whose families are poor.

My dream is not only for our minority students to be prepared for a global society but also for our “majority” students to be prepared. We are all God’s children in the final hour, and skin color, socioeconomic backgrounds, and cultures won’t matter. It is important that we all develop relationships horizontally with each other and vertically with God. If we truly love God, we’ll truly love each other. I want an environment here at SBU where it won’t matter from where you come or the color of your skin. What matters is your character and your commitment to do the work. I want our students to have an environment that supports them so their personalities can emerge and grow and their talents can develop.

I believe our minority and international students are here to learn about the majority and to teach the majority about their culture. Jesus broke cultural barriers, social barriers and religious barriers. He broke barriers of race, gender and class just in speaking to the Samaritan woman at the well! As we seek to recruit even more minority students and faculty members, I don’t want to do it for the sake of artificial numbers. It is my desire for each student to benefit from the SBU experience. I always tell our students there are no free passes in Christian higher education. Minority students should be challenged as much as are the majority students. It is difficult to come to a new culture. My wife, Judy, and I have spent time in China, and that was a very different culture for us. When I encourage a student who feels he/she doesn’t fit in at SBU, I challenge them: What have you done to fit in? What have you done to work to fitting in this environment? Who are you and who do you want to become? Who has made you feel badly here? What can we do to make you feel welcome here?

I have a dream for SBU to be a laboratory for life in a global society in which students can explore who they are and who they wish to become. SBU has a caring faculty, administration and staff who will support and encourage students on their journey. The challenge for all of us is to be consistently Christ-like in breaking down barriers to success for all of our students.

A wintry blast struck Bolivar, Springfield, and the surrounding counties with a vengeance the weekend of January 13 & 14. As this issue goes to press, the evidence of the destruction is still all around us as branches are piled high in front of nearly every home in the area hit by the storm. The Bolivar campus is still recovering. Many people were without power for weeks. Many homes are still unlivable after suffering damage from falling trees and other ice-related issues. When President C. Pat Taylor recently addressed the Trustees at their February 6 board meeting, the Ice Storm of 2007 was first on his mind. An excerpt from Dr. Taylor’s remarks to the board tells the story best:

Today, I appreciate many things which prior to the ice storm I took for granted. Electricity, warmth, and light are among the things today for which I am very thankful. I am thankful that we are having classes today. I never thought that we would dismiss classes, but when there is no electricity, there is no choice. This was the first time since 1979 that SBU cancelled classes because of the weather.

The Ice Storm of 2007 taught us many things and many memories were made. Our 525 students registered for the January term, 264 of whom were living on campus, will not forget the camaraderie and the spirit of giving that we developed. The students of Woody-Gott, Plaster, and Meyer welcomed students from the other housing units on campus. We also invited students living off campus to stay in these three dorms, which had electricity restored after being out for about nine hours. Our students were magnificent during this time. I did not hear a single complaint from a student. I did have a few parents call and express concern.

One mother called and asked me to talk with her son and tell him to come home. She was concerned that he was cold and not getting enough to eat. She went on to say that the son had told her that he didn’t want to come home, because he was having too much fun on campus. I have many similar stories that I will not soon forget.

Crises like the ice storm often bring out the best in people. I saw people rising to the occasion many times during the week of the ice storm. Bob Glidwell and the physical plant staff worked long hours in terrible conditions to get the campus ready to reopen. Dennis Owens and Chef Ernie cooked on grills outside in near zero weather so our students could have hot meals. Mark Grabowski and the safety and security staff worked long hours to make sure the campus, most of which had no power, remained protected. Rob Harris and the resident directors moved students from housing units without power to the three that had electricity. Ron Maupin managed to contact Bank of America to insure that those of us who get paid on the 18th received our deposits on schedule. The Executive Cabinet members somehow got to campus to meet with me every day to plan what we would do the next day. This crisis did indeed bring out the best in our SBU family.

After we reopened on Thursday, January 18, the faculty did a marvelous job of ensuring that the students were able to complete their courses, covering all of the material expected. I had told the students each day we met, there are no “free passes” in Christian higher education and they would be expected to complete all of the work required in their courses. Today, I am confident that our faculty made sure that all of the learning objectives for each course were met...

The Ice Storm of 2007 was an incredible disaster for this area, but SBU weathered the storm thanks to many willing hands and by the grace of God.
There are more minority and international students enrolling at SBU each year. Coming to college for the first time is a culture shock for most first-year students, but for a minority or international student, the fears of racism and adjustments to cultural differences can be overwhelming. As you will learn in the stories below, applying themselves to studies and extracurricular activities, making new friends, spending time with caring faculty and staff, and sharing their culture with fellow students helped these students ease the transition into college life.

SBU’s Global Society

Students from Argentina, Ghana, Guyana, Japan, and the United States

Just Be Welcoming

Interviews by Sharina Smith

Q. Are you from a big city or small town?
Komamiya: I am from Tokyo, Japan, one of the biggest cities!
Birks: Big city - Dallas, Texas

Q. What is your nationality and/or race?
Komamiya: I am Japanese.
Birks: African American/Black

Q. What were the factors that brought you to SBU?
Komamiya: I was an exchange student at Bolivar High School in 2000-01. I enjoyed it so much that I decided to come back for college.
Birks: My main reason for coming to SBU was to play football.

Q. What challenges did you foresee in moving to a small town like Bolivar?
Komamiya: No Japanese people at all. Not many choices of restaurants. Everything closed after 5 p.m. It is dangerous to walk outside after dark, Not many places to go (shopping, playing). Not many coffee shops.
Birks: Just getting used to the culture of living in a small town and being kind of secluded from the big city life.

Q. Have there been challenges for you adjusting to life in Bolivar?
Komamiya: Yes. I have to go exercise at the gym because I drive everywhere and do not walk at all. I have to be really careful what I eat because it is so easy to gain weight.
Birks: Not really.

Q. Have there been challenges for you adjusting to life at SBU?
Komamiya: At the beginning, I had a hard time with all my classes (because of my poor English). I also had a hard time with making friends because I was not a very open person, and I stayed in my room most of the time and studied to catch up with my classes.
Birks: No, the biggest challenge has been adjusting to life away from home and all the comforts of home.

Q. How do you keep connected with your culture while here at SBU? Are there particular foods from home you fix, different holidays you might celebrate, or ethnic clothing you wear?
Komamiya: I always check Yahoo Japan to see what is going on in Japan, and I also check the new music released in Japan. Whenever I go back to Japan during break, the first thing I buy at the airport is always Fashion Magazine. Japanese Fashion is so so fast to change. Almost every girl (my age) wears very cute clothes so I have to catch up with them really quickly! Every time I go back to Japan, I always bring many kinds of Japanese food and snacks. I also bring lots of chopsticks because many Americans like to have chopsticks for gifts. I always bring many toothbrushes and toothpaste because I like my Japanese brand. I learned traditional songs, so that I can teach or perform them.
Birks: The main way I keep in touch is my cell phone (mostly texts), but I also use the Internet and the mail. The main thing I do is every time I go home, I try to catch up on all the new music that’s out and either download a lot of songs or buy CDs.

Komamiya: If people show interest in me, I would be very happy. Most Asian people are very shy, especially Japanese. Most people have a hard time to start the conversation with strangers because we are not used to it, and we are also afraid about our poor English. I think we should be presented the opportunity to get to know each other, (for instance, have a language class so that a person HAS to speak with many people!) that would be very wonderful.
Birks: Just be welcoming, hospitable, and most importantly, be yourself. Don’t try to act one way around some people and another way around another.

Q. If you were in charge of bringing more diversity to SBU, how would you define diversity and how would you attract more diverse students and/or faculty to the university?
Komamiya: First of all, send many letters or posters about SBU to exchange programs. If I did not come to Bolivar High School, I would never find out about SBU. Bolivar is a very, very safe town, and that can be one good selling part. Since it is a small town, you will not find many people the same nationality as you, which is a very good part also! SBU has many financial aid programs -- that will be good information to anyone! I would say, just send a bunch... of letters to everywhere! And let people hear about SBU!

Q. How would you describe SBU culture to your friends and family from home?
Komamiya: I always tell my friends time goes so slow in Bolivar. Since there are not many places to go, it is very good for concentrating on school. There are lots of trees and the air is so fresh. The streets are so wide that I love driving in Bolivar. People around here are so kind that if you need help, there are many people who will support you. Teachers are very kind, also. If you go ask them, they will help you a lot! It is amazing that whole town goes to sleep after 9 p.m. It is a good place to concentrate on what you want to learn.

Q. Many minority students are the first in their families to attend college. Was this the case for you? If so, describe why you decided to attend college and any difficulties you might have had in convincing your family to let you come to SBU?
Komamiya: In Japan, most people go to college so that it was not special for me, but my father was against going to SBU at first. He thought I would decide to stay in America, and never come back. I did not want to go to the Japanese college so that I did not study at all for Japanese college entering tests. Now my father says “I think it was alright to let you go to SBU because if you went to the Japanese college, you would not study as hard as right now.”

Birks: No, my parents went to junior college, and my older brother graduated from a four-year university with a degree in accounting. The hardest part about coming to SBU was convincing my mom it wasn’t too far from home.

Q. If you participate in extracurricular activities, please list them and tell me how you balance these with your studies?
Komamiya: String Quartet, Chorale, Cello Trio, Orchestra, and Opera Theatre. Since I am a Music major, everyday I have to spend a lot of time in practice rooms or rehearsals. Good part is those are my classes so that I can do it for credit, but the bad part is, it takes a lot of practice time, but it is worth only one credit. How I did my other studies was I did not hang out with people during the week; Friday after school was my off day! Most time I went to Springfield. Saturday was my sleeping day. I woke up at 12 p.m. most Saturdays. And then, I started my homework or studying for tests the rest of the weekend.

Birks: I play on the football team, and the hardest part about balancing football and school is just making sure I get enough rest. During the season it’s especially important, because the days are really long with practice and the meetings.

Q. Would you recommend SBU to high school students back home?
Komamiya: YES! I sure would!
Birks: I would, but I would make sure they understood that it’s a pretty big culture change. But just based on the school, I would recommend it.

Q. What are your career and life aspirations?
Komamiya: I would like to teach music and English to little children, My dream is to open my own music and English school in my house with my mom. (She is a piano and voice teacher.)
Birks: Graduate with a degree in marketing, get a job in advertising, and eventually open my own advertising firm.

Q. What is the most important lesson you have learned while here at SBU?
Komamiya: Knowing more about God and grow my faith. Be responsible with everything you do.
Birks: The most important thing I have learned so far in college is I need to be sure to be a better steward of my time, and my money.

Q. Is there any other message you would like to send to our alumni readers or to minority/international prospective students who might read this article?
Birks: The main thing I would say to prospective minority students is even though the culture of SBU and the city of Bolivar is extremely different than what you’re used to, don’t automatically assume that SBU is not the school you should go to.

Q. Has your faith been strengthened by your time here?
Komamiya: My faith got so much stronger during my college time. I am so happy that God lead me to SBU and sent many wonderful people to my life.

Making a Lemonade Out of Lemons

I was born on the seventh of June 1987 to Dr. and Mrs. Aaron Offei in Kumasi, the capital town of the Ashanti region of Ghana. I spent most of my life, however, in Koforidua, the Eastern regional capital of my country where I went to primary school and Junior Secondary. My family then moved to Cape Coast in the central region of Ghana where I attended senior secondary school at Wesley Girls’ High School.

I had lived in my country almost all my life until I came to SBU last year in August. I am not the first person in my family to go to college; I have a big brother who has completed college and a big sister still in college. I had always dreamt of schooling outside my country so I was contemplating on schooling in Canada, but my dad’s friend suggested that it would be better for me to school in the United States of America. I really did not know much about schools in America, so I asked my Dad’s friend about any Christian university he knew about and he suggested SBU. I did not know Bolivar was a small town. I was just set for adventure. I searched on the U.S. map on the [Inter]net for information about Bolivar, but unfortunately I did not find any information.

I did not know there were no African students in SBU, I thought at least there would be Nigerians, but to my dismay there were none. Every gathering seemed strange to me. At home it was people of my color everywhere, ranging from the dining halls at school to the various chapels even though one may come across a few white people once in a while. Some sort of tension seemed to run through me immediately when I saw the school atmosphere - I felt out of place. I thought this was the worst decision I had ever made in my life.

Although I have lived in big towns most of my life, Bolivar has not really posed much of a problem to me. At least it has Wal-Mart. Initially, the thought of meeting people who made strange faces at me bothered me, but now I really do not care because I have learnt to ignore them. During my first semester, I went to a church in Bolivar and immediately I entered the church everyone turned to look at me. I felt like just leaving the room, but I managed to convince myself to stay until they finished their Bible study. Immediately, when the session was over, I took to my heels and never returned to the church again. That was not my last time of going to church; I finally found a church that kind of suited me - First Assemblies of God is the place. I sometimes miss the music and dancing in my church back at home, but I dance and sing on my own when such nostalgia sets in.

Thank God, there are some really helpful people out here who were ready to answer my questions whenever I got confused about things. I am especially grateful to the Ofori-Yeboahs. They sort of understand me because they are Ghanaians and can view things from my perspective. I feel very happy when they call to find out how I am doing and invite me over to eat meals from my country while enjoying the company of my “country men.” The Halloween gifts and Christmas gifts sent by the international students’ director [Judy Dutile] also made me feel better last semester. I also loved the Rotary Club international students’ dinner because it created a forum for different cultures to be shared.

I love my culture and love to share it with others if only they want to know. I keep connected with my culture by listening to Ghanaian music and dancing. I also talk about my culture with my friends. On some functions where international students meet, I dress up either in an outfit from home or put on jewelry from home. I also call my parents and my friends and keep abreast with happenings in my country. Other times, I go to a Ghanaian website and update myself on things happening in my beloved motherland.

SBU may be doing well, but there is still room for improvement. I think the administration should attend more promptly to the needs of international students when they need information about their personal files. Also, the school should form an international students’ club which meets regularly like the other clubs on campus. This will make it easier for diverse opinions on ‘how SBU can be made international-student friendly’ to be gathered. SBU can improve upon its international students’ population by choosing representatives in different countries to advertise it.

One lesson I have learned in SBU is that if life hands me a lemon, I should make a lemonade. Things may not always seem right, but I just have to make the best of my situation.

Emilio
El Alabi
Class of 2009

I was born in Bahia Blanca, Argentina. It is a city that has around 300 thousand people. I am Argentinean and my parents are, too. I came here with Agustin Mollar, and Dante Cipulli was here (both Argentineans). That might be the main reason why I came to SBU. I think it was important to come with somebody else because it made it easier to be away from home. The fact of the small town is that there are not too many things to do. Luckily, I came on the spring and we played many tennis matches which kept me busy most of the time.

I think that the biggest challenge [for me] was the language. I studied English at home but it is not the same to make it your first way to communicate. And life at SBU is quite different than what it is in Argentina. I would define Argentina as a liberal country and SBU as a conservative school; I think that might be the biggest difference, but it is not that I had to change a lot. I brought some of our particular foods such as dulce de leche (something similar to peanut butter) and mate.

[SBU] welcomed me in a great manner so I have nothing to say in order to change those things. I would try to make the
When senior Arthur Woolford was first preparing to come to SBU from Guyana, South America, his father, Paul Woolford, warned him that he might experience racism. Arthur’s father had experienced racism firsthand as a student of SBU in the 1970s and he warned his son that it might still exist. Arthur said his father had been “friends with a white girl, not a girlfriend, and people were upset.” Paul had been “ready to pack up his things,” Arthur said, “when his roommate encouraged him to stay and told him, you’ll be a leader.” Like most young men leaving for college, Arthur didn’t listen to his father’s warning.

“The hardest part of living here in Bolivar is not knowing racism existed here and finding it is here. That hurts. I love people and interacting. I had never experienced racism before. My dad warned me, but I didn’t know what to expect. I wondered if a sense of humor was missing in the Midwest. People in Guyana laugh more. I laughed in class once at something I thought was so funny. The professor and students just looked at me. Our culture [in Guyana] is different. I think it is important to tell students the truth: ‘Yes, racism exists, but we are willing to work with you and protect you.’ I had never been around so many white people before coming here. It was a big culture shock. In Guyana, we have many races: blacks, East Indians, Portuguese, Chinese, Europeans, and AmerIndians. Here, I have had dirty names said to me at Wal-Mart. My mother trained me to walk away. I was upset and I have had to have a lot of long walks. It is hard for minority students here.”

Arthur, whose brother, Selwyn, and sister, Robin, are also students at SBU, credits his parents for helping him to cope with the racism he has faced. “I’ve had to remember I’m on a mission here. It was extremely hard. My mom reminded me that I was on a mission.” In addition to adjusting to life in another country and culture, Arthur recently faced the added challenge of serving his native country in Iraq and Kuwait. Although Arthur spent 18 years being raised in Guyana, he is an American citizen, having been born in Kansas City, and he spent ten and a half months on duty with the U.S. Army Reserves in between his studies at SBU. He also noted that Robin spent one year in Baghdad with the Army National Guard and she graduated in December. Arthur said he had a “very hard time settling back into school” after taking time off for the war and took some additional time off from SBU to re-group.

Arthur has a theory that racism is caused by “people acting out of fear and ignorance.” He also found that people treat him differently when they hear him speak, since he usually converses in a very articulate, colonial English-speaking voice. “I actually have a Creole accent that sounds more like broken English,” Arthur said, acknowledging that his British-sounding accent gives him more respectability. “I came here as a biology major and I got a different education than I expected. I have learned a lot about other cultures here.” Arthur said his unexpected education will actually serve him well for his chosen mission in life:

“I want to be a medical doctor. I enjoy meeting people from a lot of different cultures. I enjoy interacting with people. My experiences with racism will help me understand people better. I worked for two years as a certified nursing assistant at Citizen’s Memorial Hospital [in Bolivar]. At first, I experienced some racism. People said ‘come over here, empty this bedpan, do this, do that.’ They heard me speak and asked me where I was from. People then asked me if I wanted to be a doctor. They said I had a good bedside manner. I was very encouraged.”

To further his dream of becoming a medical doctor, Arthur recently left for training with the U.S. Air Force Reserves where he will receive job training as an aerospace medical apprentice. After his apprenticeship, Arthur said he will return to Bolivar to finish his senior year and study for the MCATS.

Despite the pain of racism and the difficulty of transitioning from soldier to student, Arthur said, “I am thankful to be part of SBU and thankful for everything I have received here. It’s been hard, but I’ve been grateful. Dealing with a different culture here has helped me.” Arthur was all smiles as we ended our interview and began another interview with KOLR10/KFXS TV from Springfield. The TV reporter was interviewing Arthur about his winning the United States Achievement Academy National Minority Award, and Arthur represented SBU well as he gracefully told the reporter of his difficulties here and his gratefulness for everything good about SBU. -- Sharina Smith

To further his dream of becoming a medical doctor, Arthur recently left for training with the U.S. Air Force Reserves where he will receive job training as an aerospace medical apprentice. After his apprenticeship, Arthur said he will return to Bolivar to finish his senior year and study for the MCATS.

Despite the pain of racism and the difficulty of transitioning from soldier to student, Arthur said, “I am thankful to be part of SBU and thankful for everything I have received here. It’s been hard, but I’ve been grateful. Dealing with a different culture here has helped me.” Arthur was all smiles as we ended our interview and began another interview with KOLR10/KFXS TV from Springfield. The TV reporter was interviewing Arthur about his winning the United States Achievement Academy National Minority Award, and Arthur represented SBU well as he gracefully told the reporter of his difficulties here and his gratefulness for everything good about SBU. -- Sharina Smith

When they hear him speak, since he usually converses in a very articulate, colonial English-speaking voice. “I actually have a Creole accent that sounds more like broken English,” Arthur said, acknowledging that his British-sounding accent gives him more respectability. “I came here as a biology major and I got a different education than I expected. I have learned a lot about other cultures here.” Arthur said his unexpected education will actually serve him well for his chosen mission in life:

“I want to be a medical doctor. I enjoy meeting people from a lot of different cultures. I enjoy interacting with people. My experiences with racism will help me understand people better. I worked for two years as a certified nursing assistant at Citizen’s Memorial Hospital [in Bolivar]. At first, I experienced some racism. People said ‘come over here, empty this bedpan, do this, do that.’ They heard me speak and asked me where I was from. People then asked me if I wanted to be a doctor. They said I had a good bedside manner. I was very encouraged.”

“There is neither... male nor female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus.”

Paul’s words in Galatians 3:28 seem clear enough, but one must wonder how his perspective might have been different had he lived as a woman. In today’s world, women now have more career choices than at any other time in history; however, the struggle for balance between family time and work commitments, as well as for equality in both earnings and respect, continues for many. Southwest Baptist University is home to many remarkable women. Recently, four of these high-achieving women took time from their busy schedules to describe their respective journeys to the esteemed positions they now hold.

SBU is home to two female deans: Dr. Jennifer Wilson, Dean of the St. John’s College of Nursing and Health Sciences, and Dr. Linda Wooderson ’78, Dean of the Lewis E. Schollian College of Education and Social Sciences. Shelly Francka ’04, M.B.A. ’06, serves as Director for the Master of Business Administration Department. Dr. Stephanie Miller ’80 serves as Vice President of Enrollment Management.

Aside from Francka, each of these individuals was the first woman to hold her position. As pioneers in their fields, each woman was asked if she faced competition or even resentment from her colleagues. Dr. Wooderson said, “I feel no animosity from my peers... I was led by God to apply for the position and left the process in His hands.” Dr. Wilson said she was “welcomed by my dean colleagues.” As the sole female Cabinet member, Dr. Miller said she felt welcomed as well. She said, “I have never felt like the ‘token’ female member, and that is directly attributed to the other cabinet members and their acceptance of me. They are exceptional men, but they have not treated me differently and have respected my opinions. They don’t even expect me to bring cookies to Cabinet meetings!”

While Dr. Wilson and Dr. Miller do not have children, Dr. Wooderson and Francka found themselves balancing motherhood with career. Francka unexpectedly became a single mom of two boys while going through school. She said, “In life, it is all about choices. I had two: I could remain a victim of circumstances or not. I had to work full-time while attending college full-time and maintain my ‘cool mom’ status. I found out that I had value... and I found laughter. I found myself enjoying my children and motherhood so much more than I had ever imagined. I would never trade those years or the struggles.”

Dr. Wilson’s sacrifice for her education came in the form of serving her country. After 29 years in the Army, including work in an operating room in Vietnam from 1969-70, Dr. Wilson retired as a colonel. “The Army was good to me,” said Dr. Wilson, “I’m glad I did it. I would encourage any man or woman to at least look at it. It was a Godsend for me. I was on active duty for five years. The GI bill and my 24 years in the Army Reserves both helped me get through graduate school.” Dr. Wilson has traveled far and wide for her education with a B.S.N. from the University of Minnesota, an M.S. from Russell Sage College, an Ed.D. from the Teacher’s College at Columbia University and an M.B.A. from Grand Canyon University.

Like Francka, Dr. Wooderson had two children during her undergraduate studies. She said she found creative ways to pay for her education ranging from weekends at the Bolivar Speedway concession stand to Tupperware parties to a part-time business raising teacup poodles.

Dr. Miller coached and taught at Mountain Grove, earned her master’s degree in education from Drury in 1983 and returned to SBU in 1984 as volleyball coach and assistant women’s basketball coach. “In those days we coached on top of a full teaching load. I worked all the time. I was young and I had energy. I don’t think I realized how much I worked.” As she was wrapping up her coaching career, she wanted a new challenge and decided to pursue her doctorate. Dr. Miller said she continued working at SBU while earning her doctorate from Nova Southeastern University in a program that involved monthly classes in Springfield with group and online classes. Her parents were not supportive of her educational choices at first, “but by the time I got to my doctorate they were very supportive and helped me any way they could,” she said.
For each of these women, societal norms during their childhood had an enormous impact. “Today’s world is very different than it was in the 1950s. The choices are much more open to women today. There is no comparison,” Dr. Wilson said. Dr. Wooderson agreed saying, “Keep in mind that I am a product of the fifties. I was under the influence that you either stayed at home to raise children or you taught. I decided to multi-task and do both at the same time.” Dr. Miller remembered another pivotal period for women, “Living through Title IX, we are at a good place today. We are not discriminating against women or men. It had more far-reaching implications than the myopic view associated with athletics. I can see it with the opportunities females have today.” Francka’s mother worked several jobs to provide for her family, and as a result many of the daily household duties fell to Francka and her siblings. “My brother and I grew up rather quickly. We had our chores to do on top of any school activities…my mom was always working so we had the majority of the cooking and cleaning responsibilities.”

These inspiring women all agreed that women today have more opportunities than ever before. “When advising women regarding career choices, I ask them what makes them happy,” Francka said. “I recommend that females pray about their career goal, really find out what makes them happy, develop a plan of action and remind them of the commitment it will take.” Dr. Wooderson concurred, saying, “I truly believe a woman can do whatever she desires in her life. I do not feel that there are traditional roles for men or women. We tend to stereotype jobs in our own minds. Today’s workplace is an open field to any individual who is good at what they do for a living. Work as you are working for the Lord has always been my mindset in all that I attempt.”

Dr. Wilson reiterated that gender diversity in the workplace is important. “There seem to be more men that are coming into nursing. This is a good thing. The mixture of genders is an important thing to have in any field. Sometimes there are cultural paradigms that force women into certain roles, and the women who venture outside those paradigms are perplexing.” Dr. Miller echoed these sentiments by saying, “There are differences in men and women. Having a balance and bringing different views to the table is very important. It gives a more balanced perspective. Males and females have different gifts, different strengths and weaknesses. We need that.”

Another common thread was the power of influence. Dr. Wilson remembered a key figure from her graduate studies, Dr. Elizabeth Hagen. “She was very much a scholar and easy to relate to. She made it in a man’s world at a time when that was very difficult to do,” Dr. Wilson said. Francka recalled her mentor, Bontiea Goss, CEO of Alternative Opportunities, Inc. in Springfield, MO. “Bontiea taught me that in order to become successful, you must first make others successful. She gave so much of herself, and she expected each person to give his or her best.” Dr. Wooderson admitted that she has admired SBU alumni Louise Wimberly ’49 and Norma Bishop ’36. “Both women have a never-ending source of energy and are active in their community and walk with Christ. Their humor and rapport with individuals are attributes that I desire,” Dr. Wooderson said.

Influence can also have a flip side. As an undergraduate interested in the sciences at SBU, Dr. Miller remembered a coach telling her that she did not need to miss practice for science lab, and to consider going into education instead. Dr. Miller followed that advice. While she admits that the choice has had its rewards, she also said, “I think one of the losses I feel in my life is that no one encouraged me to look at my options. This is a regret, based on my age, that I was not encouraged to be a doctor or a lawyer.”

And what advice do these women have for the female leaders of tomorrow? “I try to role model what I expect my students to personify in their career. I am as honest as I can be in my expectations of them, and do my best to point them – or drag them – in the direction they should go.” Dr. Wooderson said.

Dr. Miller looks to the University Success Center as a tool for women (and men) to discover personal strengths. “The Lord builds strengths into all of us. Students don’t need to worry about how long they will be in school or how hard it is going to be. Their strength may be in a computer or math field that females don’t traditionally end up in, and they need to focus on their unique strengths.”

Dr. Wilson said, “Look at different careers, and see what fits who and what you are. Think of a career as a glove. Does it fit? Follow the passion you have, and do not let anyone dissuade you. I have seen students go into a field that they were encouraged to go into by someone else, and when it was not a good fit, they were miserable.”

Francka encouraged young women to take control of their destiny. “I read a book once that stated, ‘If you don’t like your job, it is your fault. Change it!’ I have never forgotten this. I like to remind women of all ages that we attract what we put off. If we are willing to settle for less, then less is exactly what we will get.”

Four women. Four unique experiences. These four lifetimes of hard work and perseverance provide a wealth of inspiration for those still struggling along the path to success and fulfillment.
Dr. Kwasi Ofori-Yeboah came to SBU ten years ago to teach political science. As an African-born man coming to SBU from a large university in Canada, this newly-promoted professor is a poster child for the SBU mission statement as he uses his international experience and academic education to prepare students for servant leadership in a global society. Ironically, along with international relations, comparative government, African politics, political philosophy, and public administration, Dr. Ofori-Yeboah teaches American government. If struggling students ask for sympathy from this educator, they will be told very lovingly, but firmly that no matter their race, gender, or cultural background, there are “no shortcuts” to success in pursuing the dream of opportunity in America.

If minority students come to Dr. Ofori-Yeboah for advice, he tells them this: “There are not any shortcuts to success. America has a lot of opportunities. Opportunity is not an absence of struggles. Opportunity means you have choices to make. People are not going to take this educational opportunity away from you. Education is the key to success. Christian faith in Christ is the answer to all of our problems on earth, but it is no substitute for education.” Dr. Ofori-Yeboah was the eldest of seven kids, and his parents, who had their own business, were “big on education.”

“I went to boarding school from middle school to high school,” Dr. Ofori-Yeboah said, “My parents were not Christians when I grew up, but we went to church for social gatherings. In 1978, when I was 17-years old, a Christian gospel group came to minister. My high school was established by missionaries. The government took over but allowed church services. We had mandatory services Sunday morning and evening. We also had a 30-minute chapel every Monday through Friday morning with brief devotions. The master for the week would preach much like chapel here. One evening Sunday service, when the gospel group had an altar call, I gave my life to Christ. When I accepted Christ, I said I wanted a real, new church for me. The Anglican Church was more about ceremony. I saw a church sign for Bethel Baptist Church. I went one Wednesday and I liked what I saw. They invited me to Sunday morning service and Sunday school. I became a Baptist. The church met in a school building. It was a young church, very intimate and very loving. The music was hymns from The Baptist Hymnal, and praise was traditional African choruses (drumming and dancing) – praise is loud singing! West Africa is a combination of Christianity, Islam, and the traditional African religion of Animism, which is very much like Native Americans’ worship of the natural world. Ghana is predominately Christian, especially in the South. The North is more Muslim, Animists are in the middle. In Ghana 65% of population is in the rural areas, 35% in urban. There are not many urban centers, so they are very populated.”

Dr. Ofori-Yeboah grew up in the big city. He was born in Kumasi, the second largest city in Ghana, West Africa, which now has one million people. He was raised in the capital city, Accra, a big, urban area and also, a city of one million. Dr. Ofori-Yeboah said, “It was big and it was the center of everything,” but it also had limitations. “In a Third World country a lot of people want education and can’t get it. In Ghana, you just don’t have the opportunity you have here.” He shook his head in obvious frustration with students who complain about the hard work and other difficulties involved in a university education, “No shortcuts - you have to invest time, energy and resources if you want to succeed professionally. You need that piece of paper that is education. The opportunity for education is here and people should take it. It is not a race issue; it is not a color issue. To succeed in this American system, you need that piece of paper. The legacy in American history of slavery, even though long gone, it casts a shadow. Without an education you will struggle out in the world.” Although Ghana did not have as many educational options as North America, Dr. Ofori-Yeboah made the most of the educational opportunities he had. “In Ghana, my [undergraduate] education was free, but then I had to do national service for two years, so I worked as an RA [residential advisor], and as a teaching assistant.”
Dr. Ofori-Yeboah spent the first 28 years of his life in Ghana before leaving in 1989 for Kingston, Ontario, Canada, where he went to Queens University on a scholarship for his master’s degree and Ph.D. in political science. He had met his wife, Janet, in a Christian fellowship, while they were both at the university in Ghana, and she followed him to Canada after a year and a half. They got married and started a family while in Canada. Although Janet’s background is in music and her undergraduate degree is in theatre, she began a nursing degree in Canada.

After the Ofori-Yeboah’s moved to Bolivia, Janet finished her nursing degree in Springfield at the SBU/St. John’s College of Nursing and Health Science. She is a nurse at Citizens Memorial Hospital in Bolivia. The Ofori-Yeboahs have four children: Manny (Emmanuel) 13, David 12, and 10-year old twins Sylvia and George.

Dr. Ofori-Yeboah shared the difficulties he had settling into academic life at a secular institution: “When I finished at Queens University I was hired as an adjunct. The smallest class I taught at Queens had 300 students. It was a great university, but just too secular. I was a Resident Director with the students. Every major activity they held involved alcohol. You couldn’t discuss your faith or express your faith even if students asked you. It got stifling. I began to pray seriously about where to settle down. After a year or two, I knew I wanted a place where I could express my faith. As an RD I knew kids needed spiritual help for their problems, but it was a big no no – even in the training manuals it said not to share your faith. One of my deans, a Christian, shared his Christianity Today magazine with me. I saw the Council of Christian Colleges and University’s ad and went to their website. There I saw the SBU job and applied in 1997. I came by myself for the interview. My first impression of SBU: I knew it was an answer to prayer. It was a perfect fit as a Christian university and I am a Baptist. Coming from a big city and a big university I had wanted a program with a master’s program, but I liked SBU where I could integrate faith and academics. I liked the campus. It was small enough and yet not too small. The layout was great. The faculty, I could tell, they had an intimate, personal relationship. They were not just colleagues, but friends. They’d say ‘You could use my truck!’ It’s all about relationships. This is a close-knit community. We had the twins in January 1997 and moved in August.”

When asked if minority students seek him out, Dr. Ofori-Yeboah said, “When they take my general education American government class, I get to meet most of these minority students. They don’t seek me out – I guess there is a gap since I am faculty. I try to sit with them in they cafeteria – I don’t try to ruin their party. I wouldn’t say they seek me out, but I wish they would.” Dr. Ofori-Yeboah said he has the same message for minority athletes as any other student, “Education is key. For the athletes who have an opportunity here, we don’t let them slide through the cracks. We don’t pass them because they are athletes. We try to work with them, but there is not an alternative to higher education. There’s no short cuts. I had a student who said he didn’t do well on a test. I said ‘We’ll work on that.’ He said, ‘Can I not take the tests?’ I said, ‘How will I know what you know?’

“Parents can rest assured if they bring their students here that we insist on the kind of discipline that forces you to learn. I am proud of our tradition here that minority students are held to the same vigorous standards as everybody else. Everyone who walks through our gates here is treated the same. I’m proud of our university. We take care of our own. We affirm discipline. We want our students to do well. I tell them you don’t have to like American government, but you have to learn it. I want you to be as competent as the talking heads at Harvard. We want you to hold your own with anyone. We don’t water down anything for anyone. The coaches work with us. I’ve never had one remotely call and ask for favoritism.”

If a struggling minority student or a struggling majority student visits Dr. Ofori-Yeboah’s office, he or she will be told, “I believe everything happens for a reason. It is not by accident you are here. God has a mission or purpose for you. You may be facing challenge here. If you think life is different here, try living out in the world without an education. Whether gender or race is the issue, if you think doing that homework, having words said against you, feeling that rejection here is bad, it will be worse out in the world. We have resources here. You are not alone. We can help.”

“Worse thing you can do is quit and run away. At SBU there is a place for everyone to succeed. We have help. Dr. Stephanie Miller and others [at the Success Center] can help. The issue for you may not necessarily be racism; it may be family pressure, if so we have counselors.”

“If you have an academic problem, we have professors here who have open doors and are available. If you have a spiritual problem, there is ample opportunity for help. Whatever the nature of their crisis, people are in the right place. We have resources and a commitment to help, not to down play crisis, but people have help available. Quitting is not a good option. Whatever the issues are, we have the capability, commitment, and willingness to help each of our students whether financial, emotional, or physical. There may come a time when a person may have to leave, but leaving without getting help won’t solve anything. I tell students to take advantage of the resources here. Contrary to how they may be feeling, our overarching goal is to help them succeed. My job is not to make you miserable with homework, exams, and everything else. We have intramurals, mission trips, but this is not a theme park. These are formative, yes. Mom may be sad you left and giving hints to come back, but home will never be the same. Old friends move on. This is a transition. You may be down and feeling homesick, that you don’t fit in, or that you are unwelcome. You came here for a reason. SBU was made to help you achieve your goal. Not everyone has this opportunity; make the most of it! If you try to fit in, you will. Have confidence that you can do it. Life is not fair. It is an interesting life. If it were fair it would be boring. Rest assured that God is in charge. He knows best. Life is good when there’s God.”

Men’s Basketball

Basketball is a culturally diverse sport that has provided many opportunities for many people around the globe. Bearcats senior center Jesus Lopez is no exception. Born in Spain to a Spanish mother and Mexican father, Lopez moved to Mexico as a child. It was in Mexico where Lopez picked up the game and played for the Mexican National Basketball team. Realizing that he could go to the United States and play in college, Lopez chose to attend South Mountain Community College in Phoenix, Arizona, where he was then contacted by Southwest Baptist University.

Adjusting to American culture has been an interesting road for Lopez. “You live most of your life in one country and then you come here, it’s so different,” Lopez said. “People are more direct to you. Sometimes, coming from a different culture, it is difficult to understand sometimes what they want to do with you.” Sometimes, the culture differences would spill over onto the court. “In Mexico, when you are talking to a superior, you don’t look at them in the eyes. Here, people expect you to look them in the eyes. So sometimes coach would talk to me and I would be looking at the floor and coach was like, ‘Look at me when I’m talking to you!’ So, it was kind of like colliding cultures.”

Lopez played for last season’s MIAA Championship team and is averaging 5.6 points and 4.5 rebounds per game. Lopez hopes to one day become an American citizen.

Men’s Tennis

Daniel Prerad is tall. The six-foot, six-inch tennis player from Perth, Australia, also knows what a big city is like. “Perth is about two million in population,” Prerad estimated. “Coming to Bolivar has been quite an adjustment. I enjoy it. It’s a lot different, but having the opportunity just to come here and meet all kinds of people, and people from all over the world, I have really enjoyed it.” Prerad pointed out Australia is not much different from America in many ways, but he did point out the life style and the weather, especially when it snows, is different.

Bolivar has not been the only place Prerad has visited while being in America. Through tennis, Prerad has traveled to places like San Diego and Los Angeles, California, and Orlando, Florida, places with much nicer weather than Southwest Missouri. “In Australia right now it’s like 105 degrees right now. I don’t know what it is here, but I am freezing.”

Prerad has enjoyed his experience at SBU, especially with his professors and his coach, John Bryant. “I have some friends who go to bigger schools. I think the teachers here are really cool. You have the chance to go one-on-one with them. Coach is really cool, too. He’s a really nice guy.”
Women’s Basketball

Senior Livia Brito moved out of her house in Sao Paulo, Brazil, when she was only fifteen years old because there was not a local place for her to play basketball. They did not have high school sports so Brito moved to a place where she could play for a club team. Brito could still see her parents all the time which was something she had to adjust to when she moved to the United States. “At home I could see them every week or so, but here I do not see them as much.”

She has found a family, though, with her Lady ’Cat teammates. Her favorite memories include some of the pranks teammates have played on each other.

A math major, Brito hopes to get a job in the United States. She is averaging 12 points and six rebounds for the Lady Bearcats this season, helping them get back to the MIAA Tournament. Last year, she was honorable mention all-MIAA. She has started every game in her two SBU seasons.

Baseball

With America being a melting pot of several cultures and baseball being America’s game, it is no wonder why senior Skyler Powers decided to use his talents to experience other American cultures. Working with the group, Athletes in Action, Powers, who is from Diamond, Missouri, played his games in Bolivar, New York, in minor league stadiums where Babe Ruth had played, and lived with a host family in Shinglehouse, Pennsylvania. Powers said, although the experience was unique, it still had many similarities to home.

“People were extremely excited when we got there,” Powers said. “People were interested in your life. Once we went to some of the larger towns, things were totally different. You would say ‘hi’ and they would give you some kind of stare like you were a foreigner or something.”

Powers’ experience playing baseball in New York gave him some help in trying to pursue a Major League career.

“We were in a different setting. We had to live with host families and so going into a new environment that you were not used to and trying to get comfortable. But we had an awesome host family so it made that a lot easier. Even more, we were reaffirmed of the fact we are a huge role model for people, not just for kids, but even adults. We had people come out to games that we had never met and they were coming up and talking to us like we were professional athletes. They wanted to know what we did, how we got to this level, what we ate, just awkward things that you would never think about, but somehow our status had been elevated just because we were athletes in a different place.”

President’s Report 2006
Dear SBU Donors and Friends,

For my inauguration as president of SBU in April of 1997, I adopted Romans 12: 9-18 as my inaugural theme. These verses are pertinent to my dreams for the next five years as to how we should live and conduct ourselves as members of the SBU family:

9 Let love be without hypocrisy. Abhor what is evil; cling to what is good.
10 Be devoted to one another in brotherly love, give preference to one another in honor;
11 not lagging behind in diligence, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord;
12 rejoicing in hope, persevering in tribulation, devoted to prayer,
13 contributing to the needs of the saints, practicing hospitality.
14 Bless those who persecute you; bless and curse not.
15 Rejoice with those who rejoice, and weep with those who weep.
16 Be of the same mind toward one another, do not be haughty in mind, but associate with the lowly. Do not be wise in your own estimation.
17 Never pay back evil for evil to anyone. Respect what is right in the sight of all men.
18 If possible, so far as it depends on you, be at peace with all men.

We are fortunate at SBU to have a long and wonderful heritage. Since 1878, for one hundred and twenty-nine years, SBU has offered students an opportunity to receive a distinctively Christian education. Our goals and aspirations for our university have not changed since James Rogers Maupin and Abner Smith Ingman dreamed of a Christian university and founded Southwest Baptist College.

As we approach the next five years, it indeed is an exciting time to be a part of the kingdom’s enterprise here at SBU. Yes, we have challenges, but the windows of opportunity are wide open. We have the opportunity to make a significant impact on our society, and it is my dream that we will continue to impact the world for Christ. Because of this commitment, I can declare to you that the state of the university is healthy and will continue to be healthy as we work to improve on a daily basis. We have a great heritage upon which to build an even brighter future. I believe with all my heart that the best days are ahead for SBU.

Thank you for your commitment to the university and its mission.

C. Pat Taylor
President
The phrase “university development” occasionally invokes in the minds of some people unpleasant images of someone who begs for money on behalf of a university. Although this depiction may in fact represent the experiences of some, this kind of activity does not accurately represent the ideal. “To develop” means to grow, expand, enhance, or mature. When understood this way, university development is the growth, enrichment, and maturation of a university community through diverse activities and meaningful partnerships.

I am thrilled that God has led me and my family to be a part of the SBU community. I pray that our development efforts will credibly serve the best interests of SBU in our Kingdom mission. I also want to invite each of you to join the SBU family in this mission. Your partnership with us is vital to the future health and viability of our university. I look forward to the time when we can explore together how each of us can best “grow and mature” the Southwest Baptist University family.

Q. When did you join the SBU Family?
Avery: After working in Springfield for seven years, I started working for SBU in November of 2000.
Hopkins: January of 1989

Q. What position(s) have you held during your time here?
Avery: I have always worked in the ITS department as a User Support Specialist.
Hopkins: I became chair of the math department in May 1989 (was hired with the understanding that I would become chair on Dr. Bev Harris’ retirement—he had been here over 40 years so I came knowing I had big shoes to fill). I believe my first year or two as chair was officially “acting chair.” I came as assistant professor of math, was promoted to associate professor, and then to professor of mathematics.

Q. Have you had any children graduate from or attend SBU?
Avery: My daughter Laura graduated in December of 2005 as an RN with an A.S.N. degree. She is working at Bolivar Family Care Center. Terrance is a senior majoring in Business with an emphasis in economics and finance and a minor in accounting. He is working at the SBU physical plant and at Mid-Missouri Bank.
Hopkins: My children are in eighth and ninth grade. I came to SBU without children, but visited the schools during my time in Bolivar for the interview. SBU is certainly on their list of colleges to consider, but they are beginning to mature enough to realize they do have other options for college (and going “away” to school might not be that bad). I think SBU is still their first choice.

Q. What were your first impressions of SBU?
Avery: Other than what I heard from other students, faculty and staff I didn’t know very much about SBU. After I started working at SBU, I was busy getting to know my responsibilities and meeting new people. What I found was the many godly, self-sacrificing people who seen SBU as their mission field.
Hopkins: I was very impressed by the Christian love and concern shared among the faculty and passed on to the students. I wasn’t that familiar with SBU when I came for my interview, but I was sure this was where God wanted me after the interview. Confirming this was the fact that on Tuesday after my interview weekend I got a letter offering me a job at what had been my first choice (for which I had interviewed a couple of months before—they had planned to advertise their position, so I knew it would be awhile before I heard back from them). Had that particular letter come before our trip to SBU for the interview, we would have accepted that job and not even come to SBU for the interview. We saw the timing as an indication of where God wanted me to teach.

Q. What do you feel is the best thing about working at SBU?
Avery: I enjoy the atmosphere and the people. Coming from a military background isn’t exactly a Christian surrounding. That was what was refreshing about working at SBU. SBU still is the best job I have had.
Hopkins: The Christian love and concerned shared among the faculty and students is the best thing about working at SBU.

Q. How did it feel to be named by your peers as having lived a Life Beautiful?
Avery: It is truly an honor. I was completely surprised. I just enjoy helping people, and I try to treat others the way I would want to be treated.
Hopkins: I found it quite humbling. I felt there were others more deserving of the honor. I am in awe of how God has worked various things together in my life to provide opportunities for service that I never even dreamed about when I came to SBU in 1989. I had the opportunity to share with the faculty about my experiences in running Math Contest Camp 2006 and I think that made my name “stand out” as my peers were voting. But I was also aware that if the rest of my life wasn’t sending the same message that my sharing would not be enough to cause my peers to vote for me.

Q. What is your passion in life? What brings you great joy?
Avery: Our church tries to go on a construction type mission trip every year. It is so rewarding to help brothers and sister in Christ to be a light in their communities. The best part is the relationships you build with someone from the church you are helping.
Hopkins: Right now it is working with math contests. The math department has hosted math contests for the past eight years. It has grown from about 65 students the first year to over 600 (and could have been nearly 800 except for the ice storm) this year, with over 3000 students having attended over the past years. I have gotten numerous “thank you’s” from teachers following their bringing students to the continued on page 34
If you attended any of the Bearcat football games, you might have thought you were on the set of Facing The Giants when the Bearcats were faced with defeat. Like the movie’s home team, SBU is definitely in “a David-and-Goliath story” as it bravely continues to play NCAA Division II football year after year as the minority, a small Christian university facing the larger public school teams. The Bearcats have three NFL-experienced coaches who are hungry to win, but the game for which they’re preparing their players is far bigger than a football field. These three fathers want their adopted “sons” to learn the drills of faith and family as much as they want a winning football season. And they want a winning football season very badly.

In addition to being a minority in its conference, the current roster for Bearcat football boasts 53 minority players. These 53 young men make up one-half of the football team, and they face their own giants as they work to accomplish an academically challenging education while enduring the rigorous training of an athlete. Head Coach Jack Peavey said many of these minority students come to Bolivar from small towns in the Deep South, and many of these recruited athletes are escaping some of the racism they may have faced in their past. It has often been a greater challenge than facing the racism they may experience as black students in a predominantly white community. More and more student athletes have grown up without fathers in their lives. Peavey said he and the other coaches have made a commitment to be the male role models these men have not had. Assistant coaches Tracy Hayworth and E.J. Junior have a special heart for their players and many of the minority players seek them out for counsel since they, too, are minority men. Peavey said he was the one of the three coaches mentioned who grew up out of a divorced family. Junior and Hayworth both had fathers at home, a now growing concern for the African-American community. “We all see the need for guidance, discipline and consistency for all our team to succeed,” Peavey said.

When asked why minority students would want to come play football in a mostly white community, Peavey said, “The first thing we tell them is that we coaches believe we are purposed by God to be here at SBU, he called us to be here and for that reason he brought them to us. Secondly, we have minority leaders. Third, our guidance as Christian men is important to the players and their families. A lot of our players come from the South where the Bible is important to them. We’re looking for kids who we think will fit into [SBU’s] Christian environment. They usually come from smaller Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama or Florida towns that are even smaller than Bolivar. We’re small town recruiters. They like Bolivar - there’s even more to
“We treat them as our sons. If they do something wrong, we punish them. We talk to their parents; we are their father figures away from home.”

-- SBU Bearcat assistant coach E.J. Junior
as you are.’ I made that a challenge and I was the ‘smartest boy’ in elementary school when they gave out the awards at the end of the year.”

Despite many “naysayers,” Hayworth pursued an NFL career with the same determination and was successful in meeting his goal. Since he left college to answer the call from the NFL before he finished his degree, Hayworth is now enrolled in class at SBU with a college degree in his sights. Although he came from a divorced family, Peavey’s parents both encouraged him. “I always dreamed of pro football since I first put on pads. I drew up plays from five- and six-years old and would show my dad. I think he thought I was crazy! I guess my parents knew at some point football would end. They always reminded me “you’re playing football to get an education.” It is a lesson we pass on everyday to our players. I was the first Peavey to graduate from college, but the NFL was my dream — it was important to me.”

Although they would not turn down a winning season, all three coaches expressed the desire to create a football tradition at SBU that is about more than wins and losses. They want the minority kids and the majority kids all to “step up” and be ready for the cultural changes that can happen at SBU and Bolivar. Both Junior and Hayworth see a change coming soon, when they do not have to go to Springfield to fulfill a need. More importantly, they are hoping to see a different kind of church started in the Bolivar community.

“‘The Bolivar area has a desire for a multi-cultural church,’” Junior said. “‘When I preached in chapel the other day, the kids said, ‘Are you going to start a church?’ Like them, I hunger to learn something different.’ A minister himself, Junior has learned a lot from the local pastors in Bolivar who are encouraging him to start a multi-cultural church. ‘I’m just preaching to the people of God; trying to touch souls. This is where I live, this is where I plan to retire and raise our kids. We are adjusting.”

“‘Our bond with our players is greater than our wins and losses, and I believe the bond will lead to our future success.’”

-- SBU Bearcats head coach Jack Peavey

I have celebrity status. People have been so warm to me regardless. Genuine love for people, regardless of skin color, is beginning to grow here. During the ice storm people took us in for a week; these are people who love you genuinely.” At the time of this issue, Junior’s wife is still in Florida trying to sell a house and find an engineering job in the Bolivar area. While the Hayworths and the Peaveys have opened up their homes to the players seeking a home-cooked meal or just a relaxing game of pool, Junior is starting a Bible study starting with the football team and growing to include all SBU students who would like to attend.

“We got a lot of compliments on our team even if we didn’t win on the field,” Junior said. “‘We want to be winners in life. We want this team to stay and learn and grow as businessmen and in other fields, which leads to them being better alumni and giving back. We are holding the kids accountable. The faculty teaches the students accountability to their academic fields. We teach them from the football field to be players in the game of life.”
When African-American Christopher Gardner competed for an internship at the financial brokerage firm Dean Witter Reynolds, the odds were stacked against him. Time and money constraints plagued his every move. Clearly the underdog in the program, Chris rose to greatness. He is now a multimillionaire, has appeared on Oprah, and had his story retold in the hit movie The Pursuit of Happyness. Chris suffered severe financial hardships and the struggle of being a single parent, and viewers are able to relate to his life story because they, too, have barriers in their lives. These barriers can be in the form of a physical disability, lack of self-confidence, discrimination based on a person’s race or religion, or gender biases. In the past, the workplace has held limited opportunities for women and minorities. In today’s work environment, barriers are falling and doors are opening to both minorities and women.

Three women at SBU who have broken into typically male-dominated fields are Dr. Rosalyn Snellen ’73, professor of anatomy and physiology, biology, and pathophysiology; Hillary Glauser-Patton ’01, professor of cell and molecular biology and biochemistry; and Nikki Rogers, assistant athletic trainer. While each of these women boasts her own unique story, common ground exists in their fields and backgrounds.

Dr. Snellen has been a chameleon around the university, serving in both administrative and educational capacities. In the past 12 years, Dr. Snellen has served as the assistant dean, dean, associate provost, and professor. She was also the coordinator for the university’s recent Higher Learning Commission self-study. This year, she has re-entered the classroom full-time.

Dr. Snellen has enjoyed the world of science since grade school but entered college as a mathematics major. By the end of the first semester, Dr. Snellen could not part with her first love and added biology in addition to her mathematics major. Her love for teaching developed a few years later when she accepted a teaching assistantship in graduate school. Her plans changed yet again when a graduate school professor encouraged her to pursue her doctoral degree; she had originally planned to work in conservation. Despite her unplanned journey into the classroom, Dr. Snellen loves “helping students get excited about biology and God’s wonderful creation.”

Like Dr. Snellen, Glauser-Patton has cherished the world of science since childhood. She says, “I cannot recall a time when I did not find science completely fascinating. I’ve been hooked since I was old enough to wonder.” Fellow scientist Dr. C.W. McLaughlin and Glauser-Patton’s parents were chief encouragers in shaping her approach to academia and her educational goals. Along with her teaching duties, she is currently working on a Ph.D, in science (biochemistry) education at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Glauser-Patton fostered her addiction to science in her participation in various competitions and activities such as the Science Olympiad; Missouri Academy of Science meetings; Science Knowledge Bowl; the Junior Science, Engineering and Humanities Symposium at Duke University; and a research trip to Antarctica. Her interest in teaching came a few years later. She first became intrigued with the teaching experience in junior high when she presented research at the Missouri Academy of Science. After her teaching assistantship at Iowa State University, Glauser-Patton truly found the classroom to be her natural element. Her career in education naturally allows her to empower students with knowledge and further her own passion for science. Glauser-Patton adds,
Trailblazing Women

“The moment when all is aligned and an experiment is successful is reward beyond description.”

As an assistant athletic trainer, Rogers stays busy working with the women’s soccer, basketball, and softball teams. She provides medical coverage for all practices and games and travels every weekend with the teams from August-May. Besides her practice and game responsibilities, Rogers teaches two athletic training practicum courses; supervises eight to ten athletic training students; and teaches a course for the health, physical education and recreation department. While her responsibilities might sound grueling, Rogers finds enjoyment in the athletic training field because it joins her love for sports with her desire to work in the medical field. Rogers possesses a passion for athletic training similar to Glauser-Patton and Dr. Snellen’s dedication to science.

Rogers’ path to athletic training began in her first year of college. She was initially thinking of physical therapy or medical school, but a sign advertising athletic training sparked her interest. After conversing with the head athletic trainer, Rogers started the journey through which she now guides beginning athletic trainers. Sharing her love for athletic training with students is one of the highlights of her career. Most of all, Rogers cherishes the opportunity to impact her students and athletes, “My office is open for any discussions that may help them mentally or spiritually grow as an individual.”

Fortunately, none of these women can cite any incidents where they have been particularly discriminated against for being women in their professions. Rogers does cite the presence of discrimination in athletic training in the past, “In the past, female athletic trainers have typically been hired to work only female sports. This trend is beginning to change, and now more females are entering the athletic training profession.”

Throughout The Pursuit of Happyness, Will Smith’s character references how Thomas Jefferson writes of Americans’ rights to “life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.” Happiness is in no way guaranteed to American citizens; rather, Americans must work toward accomplishing their dreams. To fellow young women who wish to break into the world of science or athletic training, all three of these trailblazing women agree: pursue your goals, prepare by taking classes in your discipline, maintain professionalism, and don’t ever give up.

contests as they recognize the work that is involved in running them. God has richly blessed these events and even when they don’t go as smoothly as I would like, students and teachers are grateful for the opportunity.

From running these contests (and having a son who is VERY interested in such contests), I have moved on to working with local Bolivar Middle School students in preparing for these contests. From that I taught a couple years at Summerscape (a program Drury University runs for gifted Middle School students). Then in summer 2006, I took a leap of faith and decided to run a camp at SBU, which I called Math Contest Camp. God blessed me with 25 campers (and four excellent helpers) in 2006. I am planning two one-week camps for summer 2007 (see www.sbuinv.edu/~khopkins/2007mcc.html) and am waiting to see where God will take this camp.

Q. Where do you live? Are you active in your community and/or church?
Avery: I live here in town. I have always been very active in church. I serve as a deacon at my church. I also take care of all technology at church, and my wife and I work together to run the sound and video during church services.

Hopkins: I live in Bolivar. My community involvement is with the school (I have coached my kids on youth sports earlier in their lives)—I teach my son there 4 days a week (and have for his 7th and 8th grade year) and run a Math Contest Club that meets after school two Thursdays a month. In my church, I help with 4th-5th grade children’s choir and youth handbells. I sing in the adult choir. I am secretary of the deacon body at First Baptist Church and coordinate my Sunday School class’s email prayer letter. I have also worked in Vacation Bible School.

Q. Tell me a little bit about your family.
Hopkins: My wife, Lori, and I met in a singing group at the Baptist Student Union at the University of Illinois. We were married in 1986 while I was still a graduate student at University of Illinois (she graduated in 1985 with a degree in accounting). Megan was born in 1991 and Eric in 1993. Megan is in ninth grade and Eric is in eighth grade. Both are excellent students and musicians. Music has been important to me. It was where I first worked with children and part of what led me to believe God was gifting me to do the Math Contest Camp. I have discovered (and tried to write a few) math songs (parodies of songs, modifying the lyrics to talk about math concepts). These songs have proven useful in classes as a stress reliever and my camp kids have really enjoyed them, too.

Q. Anything else our readers should know about you or that you would like to tell someone about SBU?
Hopkins: My parents taught me a lot about service with their lives. My father built a softball field on our farm outside Greenville, Illinois that an entire generation of young people remember fondly in that community as “Hoppy’s Field.” My mother was very involved with organizing Red Cross blood drives and was secretary/treasurer for over 20 years for a group of six churches. They were recognized by Greenville College for their service to the community in the 90’s.
Faculty Members Join North Central Association

Three faculty members are consultant evaluators for the Higher Learning Commission of the North Central Association. Dr. David Whitlock, Dr. Janet Juhlin, and Dr. Jennifer Wilson have been and will be serving on accreditation teams that visit other institutions.

Dr. David Whitlock, dean and professor, was selected as a member of a comprehensive review team with the Higher Learning Commission (HLC) of the North Central Association of Schools in October. As a member of the team, Whitlock traveled to Minnesota and Wisconsin to conduct the visit. He previously served as a member of a team evaluating a university in Ohio. He also received training as a Consultant–Evaluator with HLC held in November in Lisle, Ill. Consultant-Evaluators are members of the Commission’s Peer Review Corps, charged with conducting on-site visits and making recommendations regarding accreditation status as well as providing consultation to institutions of higher education. Dr. Whitlock also was selected as the Association of Collegiate Business Schools and Programs Mentor for Campbell University in North Carolina. He also serves as the ACBSP Mentor for St. Francis University in New York and just completed a mentoring assignment with Alvernia College in Pennsylvania. He recently concluded an on-site visit having chaired a team assigned to review Mount Vernon Nazarene in Ohio.

Dr. Jennifer Wilson, professor and dean of the St. John’s College of Nursing and Health Sciences of SBU, attended a Higher Learning Commission workshop “Focus on Evaluation of Distance Education” in November. She was invited to serve on the Board of Ozarks Fighting Back and began her work with this board in November. In January, she served as a Higher Learning Commission peer evaluator for a comprehensive evaluation of a program in Michigan.

Dr. Janet Juhlin, professor of education and director of institutional effectiveness, received training as a Consultant–Evaluator with the Higher Learning Commission (HLC) of the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools. The training was held in November in Lisle, Ill. Consultant–Evaluators are members of the Commission’s Peer Review Corps, charged with conducting on-site visits and making recommendations regarding accreditation status as well as providing consultation to institutions of higher education.

DeClue Selected to Present Results at CCSC Regional Meeting

Dr. Tim DeClue, professor and chair of the computer information science department, has been selected to present the results of a project to the Central Plains Regional meeting of the Consortium for Computing Sciences in Colleges (CCSC) in Springfield, Mo. on April 14 at Drury University. The project, which he completed during the fall semester of 2006, resulted in a paper titled, “A Comprehensive Capstone Project in Computer Science 1: Getting the (Instant) Message.” The paper discusses DeClue’s approach to teaching software engineering to beginning computer science and computer information science students. In the paper he suggests that one approach to teaching software engineering which increases success for first-year students is to choose projects for them which are real-world enough to challenge the students, yet fun enough to motivate those same students to succeed. The project discussed in the paper, and which every student in his fall class completed was a working instant messaging system.

Credille Presents Paper for Christian Business Faculty Association

Dr. Ronda Credille, associate professor of business administration, presented a paper titled “Memorable Hires: Seasoned Business Faculty Reflections” at the Christian Business Faculty Association’s annual conference in Dayton, Ohio, on Oct. 27. Credille interviewed eight seasoned business faculty members at Christian postsecondary institutions concerning their “most memorable hires.” Their recollections were analyzed for possible insights into the connections, if any, between recruiting processes and satisfactory hires. Credille presented six conclusions and six implications for faculty searches at Christian postsecondary institutions.

Eldridge Defends Doctoral Project

Dr. Carole Eldridge, assistant professor, St. John’s College of Nursing and Health Sciences of SBU, successfully defended her doctoral project, “Creating an Online Training Center for Faculty in a College of Nursing” in November; the degree of Doctor of Nursing Practice was awarded by Rush University on December 16th. She also has written a series of training modules; she wrote 25 modules for long-term care nurses and aides for Thomco Insurance Company (a company who insures long-term care agencies and distributes the material to their insured facilities for staff education) and three modules for hospice nurses and aides. These were written for Trinity Hospice. She also prepared two continuing education activities for registered nurses at Trinity Hospice; these activities were approved by the Texas Nurses Association.
Baker Receives Honors, Serves in Roles
Dr. Martha Baker, program director and professor, St. John’s College of Nursing and Health Sciences of SBU served as secretary and newsletter editor for National Alaska Native American Indian Nurses Association (NANAINA) and was elected president-elect of this organization, beginning her term as national president in October of 2007. She presented a paper, “Cardiovascular Risk Factors Among American Indian Women,” at the NANAINA’s 12th annual summit “Honoring our Traditions” in Tempe, Ariz. She also served as Coordinator for 1st Founders’ Symposium honoring Dr. Roxanne Struthers at this summit. In addition, she is Project Coordinator for the Competence in Aging grant for NANAINA. Lastly, Dr. Baker published an article in the September issue of Journal of Gynecological and Neonatal Nursing titled “Cardiovascular Risk Factors among American Indian Women.”

Compton Earns Multiple Honors
Dr. Josh Compton, department chair and assistant professor of communication, has been published in the latest issue of The Forensic of Pi Kappa Delta. The Forensic is the oldest journal publishing scholarship related to intercollegiate speech and debate. Compton’s article, “Remembering Forgetting, and Memorializing Forensics’ Past: Considering Forensics from a Collective Memory Theoretical Perspective,” was based on a presentation he made at the 2004 annual convention of the National Communication Association in Chicago. Compton was awarded the Top Paper award from the National Communication Association for his work in 2004. Dr. Josh Compton also presented five papers at the National Communication Association Convention in San Antonio in November.

Brown Completes Dreamweaver Certification Exam
Shelly Brown, director of web services, recently passed the Certified Dreamweaver 8 Developer exam. Brown is the only person in the state of Missouri that is certified in Dreamweaver 8. Macromedia Dreamweaver is a web development tool by Adobe Systems Incorporated. The Dreamweaver 8 Developer certification represents a professional level of expertise in the activities that demonstrate an individual’s competency as a Dreamweaver developer. A certified individual should thoroughly understand the Dreamweaver application, web page design, web page authoring, and supporting technologies.

Selected Faculty/Staff Accomplishments
Dr. Susan Debauche, professor and chair of the department of business administration, served as the chair of the reaffirmation team for the evaluation of the business program at Incarnate Word University in San Antonio, Texas, in October 2006.
Dr. Duke Jones, assistant professor of Christian education, taught an intensive five-day course, survey of the Old Testament, for Dallas Baptist University during the Christmas break.
Dr. William Brown, dean of the Geneva Casebolt College of Music, Arts and Letters; performed a Sonata by Dr. William Hooper, emeritus professor of music, at a composers’ conference at the University of Central Missouri in February. Dr. Brown played piano accompaniment for a choral concert at Stockton High School in November.
Dr. Melinda Smashey, associate professor, is the pianist for the new chamber music group “Mosaic” which performed three concerts in Springfield in October and November. She also performed with the group “Ensemble 21” in its debut concert at Drury University in November.
Laura Compton, instructor, was soloist in a performance of Mozart’s Requiem at First Christian Church of Norman, Okla., in November. She performed three concerts with the chamber music group “Mosaic” in Springfield in October and November.
Dr. Brian Hopwood, director of instrumental studies, worked with 200 Colorado students in a rehearsal/clinic at three high schools. In November, he served as a clinician/conductor for Marion C. Early High School clinic band in Morrisville, Missouri. In December, he attended the Midwest Band and Orchestra Clinic in Chicago, Illinois.
Terri Schmitt, instructor, St. John’s College of Nursing and Health Sciences of SBU, was elected President-elect of the Theta Lambda Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau International, nursing international honor society. She continues with her doctoral coursework at Texas Woman’s University in Denton, Texas. In addition, she did patient exams on a voluntary basis for Breast Cancer Awareness month at Deliverance Temple. This activity was held in conjunction with the American Cancer Society.
Dr. Tom Hollis, director of graduate studies in education and professor, and Jo Collier authored a chapter in College Student Death: Guidance for a Caring Campus. It will be featured by the Association of College Personnel Administrators as one of the few books chosen by this organization to be published this year (2007).
The Many Faces of Our Alumni

In my brief time as your alumni director, I have come to appreciate the many faces of our alumni. I have had the privilege of connecting with men and women of all ages, races, and walks of life who believe in and support the mission of Southwest Baptist University. If you are one of our alumni, you know the value and importance of an institution that, within a caring academic community, is Christ-centered and prepares students to be servant leaders in a global society. I appreciate that the ways in which our alumni support the university are as varied as our alumni themselves.

I believe the most important support the university receives from our alumni and friends is prayer. There are forces at work in this world, both physical and spiritual, that would love to see SBU fail in its mission. The impact of alumni praying for our students, faculty, and administration is great, and its impact on the world will probably not be known this side of heaven. SBU is indebted to its alumni who have sacrificed their time and energy to be present on campus. Your interaction with students inspires them to persevere and gives them strength to finish this part of their journey. As you interact with staff and faculty, you reaffirm to us that what we are doing here is important and has eternal value. By choosing to spend your valuable time and energy assisting SBU in its mission, you show to the world that you support and believe in the work that is being done by the university. Our alumni are goodwill ambassadors for the university and often the only face of SBU that the rest of the world will see. You are definitely our number one recruiters! Your personal testimony of how SBU changed your life is more meaningful to a prospective student than any university publication. Finally, the fulfillment of the mission of SBU would be seriously compromised without alumni and friends who sacrificially give of their financial resources.

I would like to hear from you how SBU, and particularly the Office of Alumni & Church Relations, can assist you in your journey as you seek to fulfill God’s call upon your life. I am working on planning several alumni events around the country. Homecoming 2007, October 5-6 is quickly approaching and we look forward to your return to campus. I would like to hear from those of you who have been to a homecoming in the past on what you do and do not enjoy and would like to see in the future. I would also like to have input from those of you who have not been to homecoming. What would you like to see that might interest you in returning to campus? Email me at ssummers@sbuniv.edu – I love hearing from you.

I am proud of and excited about the involvement of our alumni in the work of Southwest Baptist University. I want to say thank you to all of you who, in one form or another, have chosen to be a part of impacting students’ lives for the kingdom.

Director of Alumni & Church Relations
Dr. Jack and Edythe Fellows '40 have lived a life dedicated to spreading the Good News, and during their many mission trips, they have witnessed to diverse groups of people including Jews, Palestinians, and Muslims. Dr. Fellows said of his travels, “I have witnessed to Hamas leaders. I have taught conversational English to Arab Muslim school teachers. When I spoke before one group, at the beginning I told them I was a Christian and that was the last time they would hear me say that. When asked, I tell people that I have no way to prove that if you don't believe in Jesus you’re going to Hell. I have to accept it by faith.”

Compassion for those of different faiths has guided Dr. and Mrs. Fellows on the mission field. “I have spoken to a Rotary club in Israel where I was the only Christian,” he said. “I told them I accepted the Messiah they didn't. Afterward, I was thanked for not condemning them.”

Dr. and Mrs. Fellows have logged many miles in following God's commandment to share the Gospel. They are an inspiration to others to “go and tell,” and Dr. Fellows’ catalogue of their destinations proves lengthy:

“I would like to have included stories of the many places in the world where I have had the privilege of witnessing. One was in a cave off the coast of China for three days with a small group of Chinese Christians, while on a visit to Taiwan (Taipei); in two churches in Seoul and Pusan, Korea, and three in Japan included Tokyo, Hiroshima and Nagasaki. In the five years I was in the Balkans, I had the opportunity to witness in the following: Fuzine, Karlovac, Osijek, Selce, Zagreb, and Vukovar in Croatia; in Bosnia at Bana Luka and Sarajevo; in Kosovo, Montenegro, and other places in [the former] Yugoslavia. While working and traveling, I also spoke in churches in Germany, Great Britain, Scotland, Switzerland, and Wales.”

Because of their passion for missions, Dr. Jack and Edythe Fellows are on the planning team for the endowment for missions at SBU. They and others will be calling on your generosity during the next campaign. If you would like to make a leadership gift before the public start of this campaign, please contact Dr. C. Pat Taylor or Dr. Stan Norman at 800-526-5859.

Tessie E. Dukes, 66, of Halfway died Tuesday, September 26, 2006, in her home. She was born September 26, 1940, in Springfield, the daughter of Ralph and Aliene Fotts Dohle. Tessie grew up near Pleasant Hope where she attended high school. She was saved at an early age and joined Providence Missionary Baptist Church and was a member of Lindley Creek Missionary Baptist Church at the time of her death. Tessie was a cook at Halfway School and worked at SBU in the housekeeping department for many years. Beloved by students and faculty, she was awarded the Life Beautiful Award in 2003 before she retired. She will be sadly missed by those who knew and loved her.
Dr. Melvin G. Hall died Monday, Oct. 9, 2006. Mr. Hall was born Sept. 4, 1914, in Dallas County, Mo., to the late Ralph and Clara Hall. After high school he began work for the A.L. Taylor Oil Company in Bolivar, his start in the oil industry. He obtained his first jobbership in Noel, Mo., the Melvin Hall Oil Company, followed by others in southwest Missouri and Jacksonville, Fla., selling Phillips 66 brand for 30 years. He acquired Webster Groves Trust Company in 1960 followed by banks in Springfield, Mo., Alton, Ill., and Branson, Mo. He retired after 50 years in banking in 1998. Always the entrepreneur, Mr. Hall purchased real estate in Branson and built the Branson Inn in 1970 and two music theaters, the Will Rogers (now Yakov) and the MGH Theatre in the early 1990s. He was a member of Webster Groves Christian Church since 1996, serving on the board as elder and deacon and as trustee of the pension fund of the Disciples of Christ Christian Church for 17 years. He generously gave the organ to his church in 1965 and had it restored to celebrate his 90th birthday. Mr. Hall was a member of the Webster Groves Lodge #84 AF&AM, 33rd Degree Scottish Rite, Mason and Moolah Temple, and received the highest Masonic honor, the Brand Cross of the Court of Honor for exceptional service in 1983, one of the only three in Missouri. He served on the boards of the Salvation Army, William Woods University and SBU; as chairman of the Scottish Rite Foundation of Missouri; and as advisory director at St. Anthony’s Hospital in Alton, and the College of the Ozarks, providing scholarships and grants for many. He received honorary doctorates from both William Woods University and Southwest Baptist University, and a Free Enterprise Award from Lady Margaret Thatcher at the College of the Ozarks. In 2002 he moved from Branson to #1 McKnight Place in St. Louis. Throughout his life, he was an avid fisherman, hunter, and outdoorsman.

Please note that alumni updates are published in SBULife in the order they are received, depending on the space available in each issue. Therefore, it may take several months for Keeping in Touch submissions to be printed. Also, we will be happy to list your weddings and babies, but it is our policy not to list engagements or little expectations.
Spring is a time for an awakening of the earth and a renewal of our minds. SBU’s very own alumni, faculty and staff authors have devoted much thought and many hours to create something for everyone that will refresh, renew, and awaken our minds and spirits, including “old west” history, Christian understanding, poetry, and lessons in communicating.

For God’s Sake, Shut Up! Lessons for Christians on How to Speak Effectively and When to Remain Silent
Brian Kaylor, Smyth & Helwys, 2007

The primary lesson of For God’s Sake, Shut Up! is that the old maxim is true: sometimes it is not just what you say, it is how you say it. Kaylor’s premise is that one of the great problems in the Christian community today is a general inability to communicate effectively without polarizing or driving people away. Sometimes the greatest problem is the seeming inability of many Christians to learn the truth of another old maxim: silence is golden. Kaylor offers numerous insights for Christian leaders and followers who desire to share their beliefs in more meaningful and effective ways.

The Baptist Way: Distinctives of a Baptist Church
R. Stanton Norman, Broadman & Holman Publishers, 2005

The Baptist Way is an introduction to the basic principles that distinguish Baptists from other Christians. In some cases these ideas were once peculiarly Baptist, though they are now more widely held among other groups. For Dr. Stan Norman, healthy Baptist churches intentionally and diligently adhere to their Baptist distinctives. Dr. Norman introduces his readers to the principles that differentiate Baptists from other Christians. He also offers distinctions of theological doctrine among healthy Baptist churches. Dr. Norman states a need for churches to clearly understand Southern Baptist theology. He explicates many flaws in the church today, including measuring growth by numbers. Norman focuses on how Baptists have gotten away from the ideas on which they were founded. He concludes, “As Baptists, our distinctive theological identity is an expression of our loyalty to Jesus Christ and his Word.”

Shout for Joy: Poems From the Journey
Sharina Smith, Xulon Press, 2004

Twenty-nine years ago, Sharina Smith survived a suicide attempt and began a long spiritual journey. Chronicling the loneliness she felt at the loss of her earthly father and the bitterness of feeling abandoned by her Heavenly Father, these poems show that Smith saw glimmers of joy despite a lingering sense of ennui and emptiness. “As one who has survived trauma such as childhood incest, a teenage suicide attempt, the tragic loss of both parents, alcohol abuse, depression, betrayal and divorce,” writes Smith, “I believe my personal experiences will resonate with many modern readers … The essential message of my book is that joy can be found no matter what the circumstances of life.” Pastor Hosea Bilyeu of Ridgecrest Baptist Church writes, “Her transparency will help fellow travelers who are struggling with this awesome and sometimes awful thing called Life.”

Wisecracking
M.E. Tappmeyer, Southwest Baptist University Press, 2005

Mark Tappmeyer cleverly depicts verses and stories from the Bible into sixty-five short poems. He walks his readers from Genesis to Revelation portraying his interpretation of these verses in an imaginative, amusing, and oftentimes ludicrous way. His poems will leave you wondering if he got the scriptures correct or if he is just losing his mind. Join Dr. Tappmeyer as he journeys through the Bible in an unusual yet entertaining way.

Wire of the West
Autry Brown, University Press, 2006 (faculty emeritus)

Wire of the West is a history of barbed and barbless wire. In the publication, Dr. Brown calls his work “a definitive guide to barbed wire.” The book is divided into two parts: the history of the different types of wire and the men involved in identifying them. Dr. Brown wrote about the early beginnings of wire, the similarities and differences of the different wires, fence riders and drift fences and wire collectors and collecting. Division Two contains photographs of the different wires divided into categories. The pictures are a guide to identification and are organized by the following physical characteristics: number of wires, number of barbs and ornamental.
The following quotations are taken from thank-you letters written by student recipients to their private scholarship donors:

“I feel that God really wants me to attend SBU. I plan to further my education and receive my Ph.D. This scholarship is so greatly appreciated, especially at this time of financial hardship for my family and me.”

“Thank you so much for your generous gift. It is very much appreciated. I have been praying for more financial support, so I am very grateful for this scholarship.”

“Thank you for contributing to my future with your donation to (the) scholarship fund. It means an incredible amount to me.”

“I find it very comforting that there are people out there like you who care about helping me on my educational journey. My hope and prayer is that God will bless you for your generosity.”

“I want to share how much I appreciate this scholarship that has been bestowed upon me. I am planning to graduate with a degree in youth ministry. God has given me a deep desire to impact students’ lives, and I am being equipped here for the call that God has on my life.”

“Thank you so much for this scholarship. . . College tuition has been a bit of a struggle for me, and especially for my family, and we are most grateful for your support. I definitely plan to diligently apply myself to my studies.”

“This scholarship makes it possible for me to attend a university such as SBU. I really enjoy this campus because of the Christian morals present with the faculty and other students.”

“Thank you so much for awarding me this scholarship. I will make you proud this year. . . I am taking important classes to ensure that I become the best teacher I can be.”

“Upon graduation I will be heading to seminary to earn my masters of divinity. I am appreciative of your devotion to see students prosper and become the servant leaders which we are called to be.”

“I plan on becoming a full-time music minister after I graduate from school. . . My family and I greatly appreciate this blessing. My mom has just recently recovered from cancer and my brother is starting college this fall. This scholarship helps my entire family very much.”

“Both my mother and father are unable to work since they are disabled. You have no idea how great a blessing this scholarship is toward my education. This scholarship makes me know that God wants me here, and that I am headed in the right direction for my life.”
